

DPA Celebrates Printers' Day

To commemorate the greatest invention of mankind by Germany's Johannes Gutenberg, who is regarded as the Father of the Art of Printing, over six centuries ago, Delhi Printers' Association has been celebrating Printers' Day on February 24 every year since 2004 by organising different types of philanthropic activities for the underprivileged class of society.

In the wake of prevailing restrictions due to Corona-19, this year DPA thought up of a novel social service activity and contacted a well-known old age home known as Bhagwat Dham Dharmarth Varishth Nagrik Awas in Mayur Vihar-Delhi and finalised serving of mid-day meal to inmates and staff of the home to celebrate DPA's Printers' Day on February 24, 2021.

Office bearers, Executive Committee members and former Presidents assembled at the venue on time. They greeted the inmates with roses and served them with food laid out on tables in the open lawn. The inmates relished the delicious dishes and scattered over the lush green grass to meet and mingle with the hosts. Happiness and satisfaction writ large on their faces, they introduced themselves and eagerly enquired about the aims and objectives of the association for the welfare of the printing fraternity. They enjoyed the pleasant change from the regular humdrum of daily activities and tried to regale association functionaries with recitation of Urdu verses. Gleeful enthusiastic inmates presented some popular songs and bhajans to show their talent.

All in all the celebration proved to be a memorable event for all participants.
